With the sheer volume of trends predictions everywhere you click, the start of the business year can be overwhelming to wade through if you've just settled back into work mode. That's why the first IAS Masterclass session for the year – taking place at the Institute of Directors in Southern Africa (IoDSA) in Sandton from 2pm to 5pm on 23 January – is set to let attendees in on how agencies can better work with marketers by understanding the specific challenges they face.

Panel discussion particulars

IAS business director Nikki Munsie.

Munsie explains that the masterclass will take the form of a panel discussion facilitated by IAS CEO Johanna McDowell, in which marketing directors from a range of industries such as FMCG, service, finance and healthcare have been selected, order to share differing perspectives and encourage discussion on the year ahead and the challenges facing them in their specific industries - all in one masterclass.

You can expect the likes of leading industry panellists Alison Badenhorst of Rand Merchant Bank, Grant van Niekerk of Mondelez, Juliette Morrison of Ascendis Health, Rita Fernandes of Mars Petcare and others to share their personal takes the following topics:

- The economy and the resultant impact on their industry;
- Expected outcome for the next 12 months and how this will impact on their marketing and communication initiatives;
- How CMOs are handling ongoing pressure on budgets;
- Digital vs traditional media, and the prioritisation of content marketing;
- Procurement and marketing in terms of how marketing is working with procurement and the role of marketing vs procurement when dealing with agencies;

- Media and production transparency, particularly whether there's enough transparency;
- What they're expecting from their communication partners specifically, and how agencies can help them achieve the objectives.

As a result, attending agencies will gain insight into the challenges being faced by marketers, and how best they can to work with their clients in the coming year to support them and to help them achieve their objectives.
