

Is the global health trend bringing out the 'best' in tea?

Considering the universal health benefits of tea, it seems an obvious answer. Since the majority of consumers are now looking for an alternative to sugar-rich carbonated beverages, tea presents the logical solution. After all, most herbal teas offer dietary or health benefits, whether it is aiding your digestive system, lowering blood pressure or just calming your nerves.

Insight Survey's latest SA Tea Industry Landscape Report 2016 carefully unfolds the global and local tea markets based on the latest information and research. It fleshes out the market drivers and restraints as well as global and local market growth, in order to present an objective insight into the South African tea market and its future.

The global tea market experienced a 7.7% compound annual growth rate (CAGR) since 2009. Although black tea has been the preferred choice for tea drinkers around the world, like in the USA where 84% of tea consumed is black, its consumption growth rate is slowly decreasing. In contrast, the rate of consumption for green tea is rising annually (8% CAGR) as the number of health-conscious consumers are increasing. In keeping with the health and wellness trend driving the tea market, manufacturers are under increasing consumer pressure to ensure that their products receive the highest stamps of quality certification from companies like Fairtrade, UTZ and Rainforest Alliance.

Rooibos tea is growing in popularity globally; South Africa is the main global exporter due to the fact that it is the only country in which rooibos grows naturally. South Africa exports rooibos tea to over 30 countries, including Japan, the USA, the UK and Germany.

According to consumer research, South African tea lovers are definitely shifting to a preference for rooibos rather than black tea due to health benefits. As the graph below illustrates, though black tea has a higher consumption than rooibos, it is experiencing a steady decline. In contrast, rooibos tea is showing growth locally and even more so globally.

What about those hot summer days' desires when you do not want that scalding cup of rooibos? As shown in the above graph, iced tea has had a rather steady state of consumption over the last few years. However, when considering that fruit juice consumption (as set out in the 2016 Fruit Juice Industry Report) has seen a 6% decline from 2012 to 2015, the validity of iced tea beverages is seen in a whole new light. A healthier option to fruit juice and carbonated drinks, iced tea is a market that is filled with potential.

Thus, it can be argued that the 'best hits' era for tea and tea lovers is still in the making. With a prediction of market growth up to 2023 and new tea trends just starting to gain traction, people are likely to say yes to those new, healthy tea experiences that herbal and fruit tea infusion ranges now offer.

The SA Tea Industry Landscape Report (105 pages) provides a dynamic synthesis of industry research, examining the local and global tea industry from a uniquely holistic perspective, with detailed insights into the entire value chain – from manufacturing to retail and consumption.
