

Deep breaths, this isn't the advertising apocalypse

Despite industry-wide disruptions in the form of changing cookie policies, Facebook's decline, AI mayhem, and - everyone's pet hate - 'X', the future of advertising isn't as dire as people like to think.

Source: © 123rf 123rf An industry white paper and trends forecast from Clockwork unpacks the marketing landscape's latest developments, current trends, and what to expect in the year to come

Though it may be daunting, a cookie-less future presents an opportunity for innovation, ethics, and creativity. And, if the future of influence is nano, niche, tribal, and fanatical, isn't it time to leverage content creator campaigns and tap into the power of engagement?

Looking ahead, success in the industry will depend on agencies' and clients' ability to adapt. As pioneering computer scientist Grace Hopper says, "The most dangerous phrase in the language is 'we've always done it this way'".

SA's over 55s: Redefining aging and reshaping consumer behaviour

20 Oct 2023

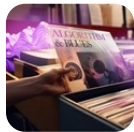

Applying trends

This is according to an industry white paper and trends forecast from Clockwork that unpacks the marketing landscape's latest developments, current trends, and what to expect in the year to come.

“This is more than a trends piece, with the inclusion of a methodology that can assist in practically applying these trends into marketing plans for 2024. That’s why we’ve deliberately launched this trends piece ahead of the year-end planning season,” says Daniela White, strategy director at Clockwork.

The paper includes five articles written by a variety of Clockwork contributors as well as an application framework to help readers put theories and plans into action. It features insights from experts in digital marketing, data analysis, digital strategy, and more.

The Clockwork paper explores how to prepare for and navigate shifts in the landscape, stating that, “with a little perspective, readers will see that 2024 isn’t the rapture. It’s just Y2K with a few extra steps”.

5 Global macro trends to guide business going forward

19 Oct 2023

Five topics

The first part of the paper covers five topics:

- The cookie is crumbling. Now what?
- AI and the future of marketing: A glimpse into 2024.
- We’re in the ‘content creator’ era. Here’s how to make the most of it.
- The future of search: Zero clicks, social search, and AI.
- Platform changes in 2024: A future view on X, Threads, Meta, and TikTok.

Why South Africa would vote for Siya Kolisi in 2024 if they could

Dono White 12 Oct 2023

More than just hypotheses

These pieces discuss what’s on everyone’s minds in a critical and thought-provoking way while analysing what industry changes mean for marketers.

While many thought pieces think too much, and theorise this and hypothesise that, often they fail to provide meaningful advice on what to do. And doing is everything. That’s why the second part of the paper presents a framework for application.

How do you use these insights to future-proof your marketing and communication?

Part 2 asks questions, interrogates data, and applies the trends that work for clients and campaigns. Clockwork’s practical guide can be used to understand how these trends will impact business, encouraging marketing and communications players to build key focus areas going into 2024.

The white paper is about turning what seems like an advertising apocalypse into an easy-to-navigate near future in just a few simple steps. It encourages those in the industry to get ready to do what we should have done all along: change.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>