

SA media's top stories for 2019

Acumen Media has released a summary of the biggest stories in South African media in 2019. Let's take a look.

January

The start of the year was filled with stories of countrywide racist incidents - from Clifton Beach to Laerskool Schweizer Reneke. Woolworths came under fire for plagiarising a design from a local business in the #UbuntuCarrier debacle.

The State Capture Inquiry kicked off with former Bosasa operations chief Angelo Agrizzi - who spilt the beans. The inquiry into the Public Investment Corporation (PIC) also unveiled some uncomfortable truths.

And, in a crime that would bring the rate of gender-based violence in South African into a disturbing context, Nicholas Ninow went to court for raping a seven-year-old at the local Dros restaurant.

February

Stories in February were centred around the then-upcoming General Election; the Vodacom shutdown; Eskom's implementation of stage four load shedding; the State of the Nation Address and subsequent debate in Parliament; Helen Zille; the emergence of the Ramaphosa leaks; the Soweto Gospel Choir's win at the Grammys; Caster Semenya; and a Men's Conference.

March

As the country got into the swing of the new year, some odd stories came creeping out. Social media users launched the #ResurrectionChallenge following "Pastor" Lukau's fake resurrection.

As the State Capture Inquiry raged on, it was revealed that Fikile Mbalula got his role as sports minister from the Guptas. A video of Mandla "Mampintsha" Maphumulo assaulting Babes Wodumo showed that, in South Africa, even a famous gqom queen could be subjected to domestic violence.

Meanwhile, the Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF) embarked on a rampage against journalist Karima Brown. The Coligny men were convicted of murdering teenager Matlhomola Moshoeu and AfriForum indicated that it would appeal.

April

Xenophobia reared its ugly head in South African in April. Pieter Myburgh's book, Gangster State, was said to be based on Ace Magashule - which caused a widespread uproar.

The total shutdown in Alex managed to get Johannesburg to a standstill. The EFF's Floyd Shivambu was found to have received a loan from VBS. Pravin Gordhan and the Public Protector got into a spat about the Sars Rogue Unit.

Afrikaans-language popstar Kurt Darren brought some much-needed reprieve from the country's happenings when he flubbed the National Anthem at a Varsity Cup final match.

In a sign that climate change was well and truly wreaking havoc, KwaZulu-Natal and the Eastern Cape experienced devastating flooding.

May

The Elections ruled in May as the country's sixth General Election took place on 8 May.

In other news, Multichoice right-out banned Steve Hofmeyr following another racist incident. Meanwhile, like Multichoice, the Nelson Mandela Foundation wanted an outright ban of racist paraphernalia in the country by asking that the old South African flag be banned. As expected, AfriForum took it upon itself to protect the symbol of apartheid.

June

The Proteas were unable to conjure any kind of Protea Fire at the ICC Cricket World Cup in June.

Women, on the other hand, were raising the flag high for SA sport. Caster Semenya was victorious on the track and in court. And Banyana Banyana were able to make us proud despite being knocked out of the 2019 Fifa Women's World Cup.

July

Bafana Bafana was off to a good start at the 2019 Afcon tournament, they beat hosts Egypt but then lost to Nigeria.

The death of SA legendary actress and activist Nomhle Nkonyeni broke our hearts. We also lost the Spirit Of The Great Heart, JohnnyClegg. Marc Batchelor was allegedly assassinated in a brazen hit, many paid tribute but others used the term "you live by the sword" to dismiss yet another murder in SA. Former Springbok James Small's death and subsequent rumours of a seedy end left social media astonished.

The biggest story in July was former president Jacob Zuma's testimony at the State Capture Inquiry; Zuma coughed and spluttered throughout the testimony and then refused to return.

August

The shocking statistics hit the media about our workforce being unemployed by as much as 29%. There was a debate about then Miss SA, now Miss Universe Zozibini Tunzi's natural hair; a poll on Metro FM regarding her win sparked outrage amongst social users.

“ Metro FM, a South African radio station gave an apology after the station's official Twitter account asked users to rate the newly crowned Miss South Africa, Zozibini Tunzi's beauty. Users were given the options of, "stunning, just ok or wrong choice." <https://t.co/u7JlshPHag> pic.twitter.com/UtvCC5cum4 - Pageant Planet (@pageantplanet) August 13, 2019 ”

The Proteas batsman Hashim Amla's retirement from cricket brought accolades from across the world. Also getting global recognition, the Ndlovu Choir won America's Got Talent.

Gavin Watson was killed in a solitary car crash with a pole; not a single post believes the story up to today. The Pretoria CBD filled with violence, xenophobia, taxi violence and police retaliation.

The State Capture Inquiry saw a witness flee in fear for her life as the testimony about Ace Magashule got more intense.

September

With the gender-based violence reaching beyond boiling point in SA - one woman is murdered by a man every four hours in SA - women took to social media to ask #AmlNext.

#AmlNext is not a hashtag, it's the reality of life as a woman in South Africa

November

The Springboks won the 2019 RWC, making Siya Kolisi the first black Springbok captain to lift the Webb Ellis Cup. Meanwhile, Faf de Klerk memes covered the media.

While the country was still in high spirits, the KFC proposal and Streetwise Wedding took social media by storm as the proposal turned into a fairytale courtesy of SA's social media.

December

While the country held its annual 16 Days of Activism against gender-based violence, there were several grotesque GBV instances across the country.

Eskom started stage-hopping during load shedding - which saw more stages being added to our load shedding schedules. Meanwhile, South African Airways (SAA) was placed under business rescue.

Black Friday sales reached figures of R6bn; over double from last year.

It may seem like we're living in a Bizzaro country but South Africa will always be alive with possibilities as long as we always find a light at the end of the load-shed tunnel.
