

Modern Storage

More and more people are using self-storage; some are outgrowing their homes or businesses, others need to seasonal storage space and there are an increasing number of small businesses set up online or from home that require storage. Whatever the reason, self-storage has become a safe and secure storage option for South Africans who need extra space. StoreSmart is a local storage solution with two central, accessible locations in Century City and Cape Town's CBD that have a variety of units to suit your needs.

Located off Queen Victoria Street in the CBD, the site boasts 200 units ranging in size from 5m2 to 22m2 that are accessed-controlled, protected from fire and climate, secured by CCTV, infrared beams and alarm systems, giving you peace of mind that your valuable possessions are safely stored-away.

"Currently we have a variety of tenants, we have a top retailer using our ground floor units as a dispatch for online shopping, musicians who store their instruments who come to practice in their units where there is no-one to disturb, there are students who have packed up for their summer vacations and young families who have stored their baby stuff. It really is a service that is used by different people for their different needs." Steenkamp explains further "We also find that small local businesses and restaurants use our storage units which cost much less than premium retail space to store their stock and equipment."
