South African soulful singer Ramelo released her debut single "Heyi Wena", last week.

The musician hails from Durban but has lived in Johannesburg for the past 10 years. Ramelo rose to notoriety when she appeared in the third season of the reality TV singing competition The Voice SA in 2019 - as one of the top 12 finalists.

According to Ramelo, the main inspiration for her single was that 2020 was "a year of many harsh realisations".

"As an artist, I felt like no one really cared about the way Covid-19 affected our careers and how we all lost our main and in some instances only source of income. As a woman, I felt like the fight against GBV wasn't being fought consciously by the majority and seemed to be a passing phase coming and going according to the wave of tragic incidents reported on the news. However, I saw artists reach out of their comfort zones to find different ways to survive and keep themselves afloat. "Heyiwena" is saying: "Hey you! In spite of the injustices of life, we conquer still, we're ready and 'fired up' for whatever life brings," she says.

We talked last week.
