Small hotel, big experience: 10 out of 10

By Brian Berkman: contributing editor, travel

By winning the title of South Africa's Best Luxury Country Hotel for the second consecutive year in the 2012 World Luxury Hotel Awards, The Robertson Small Hotel has confirmed itself as a go-to destination.

How's this for a novel idea.

just 10, rooms - and free Wi-Fi

The Robertson Small Hotel has 10 rooms. The Manor House is where reception, restaurant, bar and suites are located while the spa and additional suites are built into what were once the stables. We stayed in one of the pool suites that run along the length of the narrow pool. Despite the hotel's historic 1909 Cape Victorian connections the interiors are contemporary glam.

I especially liked that good-signal Wi-Fi was freely available and that the mini-bar contents were included in the room price. I also liked that there were plugs of many shapes so I could charge computer, phone, camera and iPad all at the same time. Not enough hotels nowadays have sufficient plug points at desk height or bed-stand height available.

I don't care for peek-a-boo bathrooms and the one in our suite at least allowed us to close the shutters for visual if not auditory privacy. I was impressed by the clever architecture that positioned narrow, horizontal bathroom windows high up to allow for light and ventilation but also privacy from the outside.

It was too chilly when we visited to use the pool (if it were up to me five stars would only be granted to hotels with heated swimming pools) but I loved the idea of being able to step straight off our balcony into the pool and to sit akimbo with my legs dangling into the frigid water.

Time to relax.

This is what you fall out of and into the pool.

Shaken, not stirred

Dinner and breakfast at Reuben's were a highlight. I thought the food better than at his Cape Town location. The complementary canapés served in the bar before dinner were so delicious I might have spent the whole evening there. Speaking of drinks, I recently received a breathless media release about "Sunsational Signature Sundowners @ The Small" causing a stir on Wednesdays from 1700 to 1930 and bookings are essential.' They're trying their best to draw on the hype of the new Bond movie with oh-so-cute names for their cocktails and, given the hotel is 90 minutes from Cape Town, appealing to local Robertson/McGregor types. Nothing wrong with that. I salute all they do to keep their property top-of-mind and draw people in for mid-week visits. When last I checked weekends at the hotel were chocoblock and that's without a bottle of
