

Farming communities implements extra security measure

The Agri Securitas Trust Fund made a financial contribution to the farming communities of Umvoti in KwaZulu-Natal and Colesberg in the Northern Cape, allowing them to implement additional security measures to safeguard themselves against crime. This included number plate recognition cameras and a radio repeater which will be used to monitor access and improve radio communication among members of the respective communities.

©vasin leenanuraksa via 123RF

“Amidst various challenges, including the negative impact of crime on their businesses, farming communities depend on agriculture for their livelihood and are finding it increasingly difficult to survive and continue with production. It remains difficult to explain to those who must produce sufficient food as their primary responsibility that they also have to ensure their own safety,” said Japie Grobler, chairman of the Agri Securitas Trust Fund.

With these contributions, the Trust Fund tries to help farming communities to take precautionary steps rather than reactive measures. “By helping them to create a safer production environment, the Trust Fund wants to make a proactive contribution towards keeping farming communities safer and maintaining production to feed the country’s growing population,” said Grobler.

These security projects once again serve as proof of the farming communities’ willingness to look after their own safety and to address the crime problem based on unique solutions for their specific area. In the process, affect is given to some important objectives of the Rural Safety Strategy, namely to improve rural communities’ safety and security and to implement systems to address crime.

The Trust Fund cannot perform this task alone and therefore acknowledges the financial assistance provided by its strategic partners, namely Nissan SA, Sanlam, CrisisOnCall and Sonfin.