

Numsa ends ArcelorMittal strike after signing wage deal

The National Union of Metalworkers of South Africa (Numsa) on Wednesday, 25 May, said it has signed a wage deal with ArcelorMittal South Africa, ending a two-week strike over a pay dispute

By Nelson Banyane ^{26 May 2022}

Source: Reuters/Sumaya Hsham

The union, which embarked on a strike on 11 May demanding a 10% wage hike, said it had agreed on a 6.5% increase across the board - on basic pay and allowances - backdated to 1 April 2022.

The company, Africa's biggest steel producer which is majority-owned by Luxembourg-based ArcelorMittal SA, also agreed to make a one-off payment to all workers of R5,000, the union said.

MATERIALS & EQUIPMENT

Seifsa calls on SMEs to make their voices heard at Mainstreaming the Steel Master Plan Conference

9 May 2022

Above-inflation increase

"The National Union of Metalworkers of South Africa is pleased to announce that it has signed an above-inflation increase for all workers at ArcelorMittal South Africa (Amsa)," Numsa said in a statement late Wednesday.

"We met with the executives of the company today to negotiate an end to the strike our members accept. As a result, the strike at AMSA is over."

ArcelorMittal was not immediately available to comment.

The company had tabled a final offer of 7%, made up of a 5% increase across the board on all remuneration elements as well as a 2% cash equivalent based on all remuneration elements.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>