

Azzaro hits the right note

By  Brendan Seery

10 Jul 2023

Rule Number One for anyone involved in advertising - as it is for the news business - is that you are not the target market. Which is the preface for this week's Orchid.

I am certainly not the target market for this product and I find the execution of the ad not only pretty cliched but also way out of my normal world – both the actual and even the aspirational.

Desire to consume

Yet, Orchids are given not only to those ads which I like or which might push me to buy the product, they are given primarily for marketing and advertising which creates a desire in a target market – a desire which can be filled immediately, or with time.

Why the ad for Azarro men's Eau de Parfum will be so effective is because it speaks directly to one of the characteristics of our young nation – the ability to consume, on a vulgar scale, while millions go to bed hungry at night.

If that sounds cynical, blame it on a small excursion to Instagram recently, where our local royalty (i.e the shakers and movers in politics and business) flaunt their expensive toys, from houses to multi-billion Rand cars and SUVs. It was all accompanied by a “don't feel bad about yourself bro cause you got money” vibe which implied that poor people (the haters) have only themselves to blame for their status.

#OrchidsandOnions: Chicken Licken takes coach Jose Mazibuko to the top

Brendan Seery 3 Jul 2023

Not all poor people would hate this exhibitionism, though...many would love to be there and do that themselves. People gotta eat dude. Maybe that's why there is so much corruption and looting in South Africa.

Still, I have to give it to the people who put the Azarro ad together – definitely an overseas production – because they have zeroed right in on that vulgar consumption market, as well as those who aspire to Mercs, Ferraris, Lamborghinis and sushi on the belly buttons of half-naked models.

The dude in the ad – a sort of Latino James Bond – is so beautiful he almost transcends the cliché. But the rest of the tried and trusted stereotypes are there: open-top car driving on a mountain road with excited girls, designer suits (even if these are worn with no shoes); the babe-like object who cannot help but fall into his arms.

His charms, though? Or maybe the desire-igniting aroma of Azarro? The message is: Wanna be this guy? Get the perfume.

It's all backed by a hectic gangsta-type soundtrack and, best of all – given how much boys (of whatever age or demographic) love guns – is that the Azarro smell comes packaged in a container that looks exactly like a re-loader for a revolver.

All very seductive and highly effective, given the market it is trying to reach.

So Azarro gets an Orchid.

This article has been amended.

ABOUT BRENDAN SEERY

Brendan Seery has been in the news business for most of his life, covering coups, wars, famines - and some funny stories - across Africa. Brendan Seery's Orchids and Onions column ran each week in the Saturday Star in Johannesburg and the Weekend Argus in Cape Town.
■ #OrchidsandOnions: DA crosses line in political persuasion - 27 May 2024

- #OrchidsandOnions: Scientists sail across the seas to satisfy their KFC craving - 17 Apr 2024
- #OrchidsandOnions: Auto and General sets the standard in insurance claims - 11 Apr 2024
- #OrchidsandOnions: Checkers pranks commuters over holiday weekend, Curro Holdings faces backlash - 4 Apr 2024
- #OrchidsandOnions: The Boswell family's multi-generational journey with Ford SA - 25 Mar 2024

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>