“We’ve experienced tremendous growth in the past two years, and the hotel has become one of the country’s main attractions for business and leisure travellers alike. Thanks to the resort’s world-class venues and facilities, Lilongwe now has the appropriate facilities to host highly successful events on a national and international scale,” says Derick van der Nest, Umodzi Park’s general manager.

Developing positive growth

The resort has also introduced educational programmes designed to empower Malawian youth with the skills they need to pursue sustainable careers in the hospitality industry. For instance, Umodzi Park offers a four-month internship programme in partnership with the Malawi Institute of Tourism, providing MIT students with the opportunity to gain practical hospitality experience at its five-star President Walmont Hotel and at the world-class BICC. Since its launch in 2015, 75 students have benefited from participating in the comprehensive internship programme, with 10 interns offered employment at the resort.

In addition, the establishment of Umodzi Park has made a significant positive impact on local tourism. Along with introducing much-needed conferencing facilities able to accommodate international and regional conferences in world-class style, the launch of a five-star hotel has challenged Malawi’s current industry, shedding light on areas for potential improvement within the hospitality industry.

Industry players are seeing the need to up their game to take Malawi to greater heights in terms of its tourism offer,” says Van der Nest

Looking to the future, Van der Nest says that Umodzi Park plans to maintain and build its reputation for excellent service delivery in all areas of business, and keeping its brand promise of five-star luxury and world-class experiences.
