

Increasing Africa-India trade

Increasing India-Africa trade ties remains a priority for India in reflecting a shared history and a common vision for the future of both regions.

The ties between Africa and India were strengthened even more after independence as African countries and India both emerged from colonial rule with a determination to develop their regions through an equal partnership. As a result, India is seen as a trusted partner in Africa.

In a recent visit to Uganda, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi noted that the current India-Africa partnership includes implementation of 180 lines of credit worth USD11 billion in over 40 Africa countries and USD600 million in grant assistance.

Today India's trade with Africa is over USD62 billion with plans to increase this volume further.

India has taken a long-term view of its engagement with African countries by participating in existing institutions in order to support the continent's drive to build itself from within. One such example is the Government of India's recent decision to invest USD10 million in the African Trade Insurance Agency (ATI).

The shareholding positions India as the first non-African government to become a member of the pan-African and multilateral investment and credit insurer with the expected result of boosting India's trade with Africa.

“ Today India's trade with Africa is over USD62 billion with plans to increase this volume further.

The Export Credit Guarantee Corporation of India (ECGC) will represent the government's shareholding in ATI. ECGC's most recent results show the company has USD99 billion in exposures and it insures 32% of India's exports. ECGC has operated in Africa since the 1960s with plans to deepen its engagement in Africa.

“India's membership in ATI is a landmark development for a symbiotic relationship between the two fastest growing regions in the world. It is indeed a proud moment to be the first non-African state shareholder of ATI. This partnership will not only give a fillip to the bilateral trade but also will contribute towards development of projects and enhance capacities and skills,” noted Geetha Muralidhar, chairman and managing director.

The partnership is expected to help ECGC leverage its capacity to support even greater volumes of Indian exports into Africa. For ATI, India's investment enables it to provide much needed capacity to the continent.

Lenders are bound by regulations that prevent them from lending significant amounts to sub-investment grade sovereigns, which is the case for most African countries. Institutions such as ATI that can offer investment insurance can help to mitigate the risks and thereby bring added lending and investment capacity to African markets.

"We are delighted to welcome the Government of India to the ATI family. This is a historic initiative that is also important because it underscores the possibilities of South-South cooperation and for developing regions to partner more with each other – drawing on natural synergies to further each other's development objectives," commented George Otieno, ATI's chief executive officer.
